

THE CRIMINAL WORLD.

Horrible Murder in Western Pennsylvania.

From the Pittsburgh Commercial, 10th.

A deliberate and cold-blooded murder was committed on Saturday evening about six o'clock, at McCoy's Station, on the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad, between Steubenville and Wellsville, Ohio, and about fifty miles from this city. The perpetrator of the deed was a wealthy farmer named Lewis McCoy, who resides near the station, and the victim a man named Joseph McDonald, a citizen of New Cumberland, West Virginia. It appears that a feud existed between the parties, growing out of a quarrel in which McCoy had been badly beaten. On Saturday evening, McDonald, who had been engaged to work in Steubenville, arrived at the station on the eastern bound train, in company with six other persons, when he was met by McCoy, who had armed himself with a revolver and rifle. As soon as McDonald got out of the train McCoy rested his rifle on the side of a house, took the victim at him and fired, the ball entering the forehead, passing through the head, and shattering the back part of the skull. The injured man was carried across the river to his residence, where he died on Sunday morning about 4 o'clock. Immediately after the shooting McCoy went to Steubenville and delivered himself up to the authorities. He acknowledged to having committed the deed, but said that he had not intended to kill McDonald, but only wound him. He was placed in the stocks on the eastern bound train, which will take place to-day. On Sunday, John McCoy, a son of the prisoner, and a girl who was on a visit to her father at the house where the affray took place, were arrested as accomplices. McCoy was subsequently released on bail. The girl is charged with having urged McCoy to shoot McDonald. McCoy, the perpetrator of the crime, is one of the wealthiest farmers in that section of the country, owning much of the land in the vicinity of McCoy's Station, which was named for him. He is well-known to river men, having been for many years a steamboat captain. He was recently divorced from his wife, who now resides in Allegheny City.

The Hughes Murderers Sentenced—Execution to Take Place April 30—Appearance of the Doomed Men—Goetz Jokes, and Case Weeps—Aulus Sad and Downcast.

From the Cincinnati Times, 9th.

At half past 12 o'clock, to-day Goetz, Case, and Aulus, the murderers of Hughes, were brought before Judge Mumford for sentence. While sitting on the prisoners' bench both Goetz and Case appeared cheerful, the former exceedingly so; but Aulus looked downcast and melancholy, and his face was quite gray. A motion was made for an arrest of judgment in the case of Aulus, on the ground of an insufficiency in the averments of the indictment, but it was overruled, as was also the motion for a new trial in the case of Case, on similar grounds; and the prisoners were ordered to stand up. The trio of murderers were all chained together, and both Goetz and Case were defiant and careless in their demeanor—the former laughing, and the latter weeping. Judge Mumford stated that he could say nothing to them which would impress more deeply than the testimony had done, the greatness of the crime, and the wisdom as he felt satisfied that they were numbered. He said that there was little or no hope of Executive clemency, especially for Goetz and Case. At these remarks Goetz laughed, and Case, for the first time, looked solemn. Aulus, as before, wore a downcast appearance. The Judge then pronounced the sentence on each separately, and when Goetz heard his, he commenced joking, and remarked that this was the first time he had any assurance that he would live even till the 30th. Case, who had become considerably downcast, began to weep profusely while his sentence was pronounced, and Aulus wept like a child. The prisoners were then taken to the jail, to be kept in solitary confinement till the day of execution. There are petitions in circulation for the commutation of the sentences of Aulus and Case; but we hope, so far as the latter is concerned, that the Governor will administer full justice—will reject the petition.

Murder of General Bankhead—No Clue to the Perpetrators.

We condense the following from the Memphis Bulletin of the 2d inst.

"Another victim has fallen by the hand of an assassin on the streets of Memphis. General Smith P. Bankhead, the gifted, the noble, and the talented is no more. He died at a late hour on the night of Sunday, the 2d inst., from the murderous blows received at midnight on Saturday, from the blade of an unknown assassin, after lingering in the greatest agony for about twenty-four hours. The particulars of the murderous assault may be briefly recapitulated. During the evening he had been with a number of friends at various places in the city, and while alone between 11 and 12 o'clock, he entered a singing saloon on Main street, known as the 'Golden Star.' Left that place about 12 o'clock, and while passing along a dark street at the corner of Washington street, a midnight assassin, who had evidently been on his track, with the intention of robbing him, came up behind the General and struck him a fearful blow over the head with a bludgeon, inflicting a frightful wound. The blow was repeated four different times, and the unfortunate gentleman fell to the ground, with his skull fractured in two places, and the brains protruding from the wounds. A man, who was standing near by, saw Washington street at the time, distinctly saw the blows given, and rushed to the spot. The assassin, however, doubtless saw him approaching, for he made off so rapidly a pace that he could not be captured. The man, who was seen by the witness, was a white man, and was dressed in a dark suit, and was unable to give any description of his personal appearance. The three persons, immediately on coming to the spot where General Bankhead lay, did all they could to help him, and had him conveyed to the First District Police station. Dr. W. H. White was soon in attendance, and did everything in his power which medical skill could suggest for the wounded man. From the injuries he had received, Dr. White said, that he was hopeless, and that the only chance of recovery was in the very serious injuries he had received. He was conveyed to his residence as speedily as possible, and although the most eminent medical gentlemen in the city were in attendance, their efforts to prolong his life were all in vain. The General lay in an almost unconscious condition till a late hour on Sunday night, when death came to his relief, and the spirit returned to the God who gave it. Coroner Cotton held an inquest on the body, and although Captain Waldron, Mr. Peters, and the policeman were all called as witnesses, no light was thrown on the mysterious murder, and no clue could be got to the midnight assassin. The jury returned as their verdict that the deceased came to his death by being struck on the head, thereby fracturing the skull, by an instrument in the hands of some person or persons to the jury unknown." In the forenoon of yesterday a man named Spillman was arrested on suspicion of having been the assassin at the same time that General Bankhead did, but he appeared to know nothing about the matter that was likely to lead to the apprehension of the assassin. A meeting of the members of the bar

EXTRAORDINARY RAID UPON CHURCHES.

Church Burglaries by Wholesale in Vermont.

From the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press, April 8.

An extraordinary raid was made by burglars last night on the various churches in our city, in the course of which every church in Burlington was entered. The burglary was entered by prying open a window in the basement. The Sunday School library was broken open and the books tumbled on the floor, all the various drawers and closets broken open, and all the communion service stolen, including a baptismal bowl of solid silver. The First Congregational church was entered by the door of the coal vault in the rear, which as a split open; nothing was stolen here, though all the drawers and closets were broken open, and coverings stripped from the pulpit, and everything searched for articles of value. The Third Congregational church was apparently entered by breaking a pane in one of the side windows in the basement, and then going up stairs at all, but ransacking the lower rooms, breaking open all the drawers, spilling the contents on the floor, and carrying off a quantity of the private property of the pastor, Rev. G. S. Safford, who, having at present no house of his own, was sleeping in his study in the church. The property taken comprised a gold watch and a quantity of family silver, including a number of wedding presents to Mrs. Safford, amounting to some $500 in value. The Baptist church was entered by a rear basement window, which, it would seem, must have been left a little open, enough to admit the burglar's bar, as the spring of the window was not damaged. Nothing was found in this church, though everything was searched for articles of value. A quantity of pewter spoons used at Sabbath School picnics were bent and twisted to test the metal; a door leading into the organ was taken out, and no place untouched which might have had valuable contents. Also the Episcopal church was still more easily entered, as the front door was left unfastened, the church being in the hands of workmen for repair and enlargement. The contents of the Sabbath School contribution boxes, two or three dollars only, were kept in the church here, the communion service plate, which was in use during the evening, having been removed to a private house.

The door of the Roman Catholic church (St. Mary's) was forced open after an ineffectual attempt had been made to unlock it, the contribution boxes robbed, and silver goblets and church ornaments stolen. The robbers drew down and lit the large lamp in the vestibule to aid them in their search, and then carried around some of the wax candles from the altar. They left in the lock an iron key they had tried to use, and inside an iron draw bar, much bent, which was identified by the sexton of the Unitarian church as the one used by him for a number of years. The Unitarian church was apparently forced open by the use of this key, as well as the door of the Catholic church. The marks in the other churches show a smaller iron to have been used.

BURGLARIES IN NEW JERSEY.

Twenty-two Burglaries Committed by One Man in Hoboken, Jersey City, Orange, Newark, &amp;c.

From the Newark Journal, April 9.

Some days ago we chronicled the arrest of a man who stated his name was John J. Harrison, with a lot of burglars' tools in his possession, by a couple of constables at Orange. Some $800 worth of property was recovered by the police of Newark the day after his arrest, which he acknowledged having stolen, and he was fully committed. Since that time the independent detectives of this city have been working in conjunction with the Orange officers in hunting up the balance of the property supposed to be stolen by the prisoner, whose real name is Charles T. Wood.

The result of their exertions has been that they have recovered several thousands of dollars' worth of the stolen goods at Hoboken, Jersey City, Orange, and Newark. While on the track of some of the stolen goods the officers ascertained that a sister of the prisoner was residing at Hoboken. She is a respectable young lady, a member of one of the churches at that place, and was the wife of a man who had been the character of her brother, who she supposed was working at his trade in Orange. He visited her but seldom, one time staying away for a period of nearly eight years; the last time he called was in February, when he was there for a quantity of goods to her house at various times, in all amounting to several hundred dollars' worth, and consisting of turkeys, chickens, potatoes, preserves, blankets, &c., nearly all of which were recovered. She stated that her brother was born in New York city, and that she is the only relative he has living. She had a likeness of him, which he hid in the room at the home of the last time he visited, which the officers succeeded in finding, and it establishes his identity beyond a doubt. She could hardly be convinced of her brother's real character, until one of the Orange officers showed her a likeness of him, taken after he had been handcuffed. After seeing his sister the officers paid a visit in the jail, and on informing him of the information they had received, he was much moved and entirely unnerved. He made a clean breast of all his recent transactions, and told the officers where more of the goods could be obtained. He had stowed away a lot of goods in an old house in Orange, where Marshal Tompkins found them, the prisoner having described the locality, etc. Singular as it may seem, the goods were all recovered in Orange have been robbed by this man, alone and unaided. Constable Robinson and Marshal Tompkins, of Orange, and Detectives Hazegarty and Becker, of this city, are still engaged in hunting up a number of stolen articles that are yet missing.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The New Official Oath in Virginia.

General Schofield has issued the following order prescribing an oath to be taken by all officers hereafter to be elected or appointed under the Provisional Government of Virginia:—

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DISTRICT, STATE OF VIRGINIA, CHIEF OF MILITARY DISTRICT, APRIL 10, 1867.

ORDER OF APRIL 2 AND 23, 1867, ALL OFFICERS hereafter to be elected or appointed under the Provisional Government of Virginia, in addition to the oath of office prescribed by the laws of the State, be required to take and subscribe the following additional oath:—

"I, the undersigned, do hereby swear, in the presence of Almighty God, that I have not been disfranchised for participation in any rebellion or insurrection against the laws of any State, or of the United States; that I have never been convicted of felony committed against the laws of any State, or of the United States; that I have never been engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; that I will faithfully support the Constitution, and obey the laws of the United States, and do so help me God."

By order of Brigadier and Brevet Major-General J. M. Schofield, U. S. A.

S. F. CHALKIN, Assistant Adjutant-General.

No Congress this Summer.

Senators will separate this week, tired of the Capital, and with the understanding, as there was in the House of Representatives last month, that there will be no session before December. In the meantime, the Southern Conventions will be held, and from all appearances, so perfectly subdued and suffering from the people of the South, the majority in these Conventions will be in favor of the laws of Congress. As for impeachment, we regard it as practically a dead issue. The Judiciary Committee will sit, hear evidence, deliberate, and in time report, but as there is no plea upon which the President can, even upon party grounds, plausibly be impeached, the end of the solemn farce will come sooner than was at one time expected. This for 1867. In 1868, after the first six months, the attention of the people will be given to Mr. Johnson's successor. The nomination of May of June will be followed by the summer and autumn campaign, and so practically end all that belongs to the noise and passion of long-threatened impeachment.

—N. Y. Express.

PHILADELPHIA, THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1867.

Destructive Fire in Wilkesbarre, Pa.

Full Particulars as to the Conflagration.

—Names of the Sufferers and the Amount of Losses—A Large Number of Business Houses Destroyed—Narrow Escape of the Wyoming Valley Hotel, &amp;c.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., April 9.—One of the most destructive fires ever known in this section of the Keystone State, and one which has laid a very large portion of this beautiful and enterprising town in ashes, occurred to-day. To a Gothamite, and especially to one who looks upon such matters with an eye replete with the conflagration which has created such excitement here would not be considered as a matter of extreme importance; but when the extent of the destruction is taken into consideration, about twelve thousand, and when the fact is further understood that many of the most important business establishments here are now a heap of smouldering ruins, it may be readily imagined that the people here are inclined to the opinion that the destruction wrought to-day by the imp of fire they have a decidedly "big thing" in the way of conflagration. Judging of it as a Gothamite would judge, i. e., considering everything from a Manhattan standpoint, it is as if, for instance, a fire had laid in ashes Broadway from Wall street to Canal, and on either side of Broadway midway between it and the East and North rivers, respectively.

The fire broke out at 7 o'clock this morning in the unware establishment of Mr. Theron Burnett, on Market (the principal) street, and is thought to have originated from a portable charcoal furnace, (such as tinners use for soldering purposes), which had been left unattended in the rear part of the establishment. As that section of the street in which the conflagration commenced was made up mostly of frame buildings, the fire extended quite rapidly, and owing to the absence of any steam fire apparatus it was by him for a number of years. The Unitarian church was apparently forced open by the use of this key, as well as the door of the Catholic church. The marks in the other churches show a smaller iron to have been used.

The fire broke out at 7 o'clock this morning in the unware establishment of Mr. Theron Burnett, on Market (the principal) street, and is thought to have originated from a portable charcoal furnace, (such as tinners use for soldering purposes), which had been left unattended in the rear part of the establishment. As that section of the street in which the conflagration commenced was made up mostly of frame buildings, the fire extended quite rapidly, and owing to the absence of any steam fire apparatus it was by him for a number of years. The Unitarian church was apparently forced open by the use of this key, as well as the door of the Catholic church. The marks in the other churches show a smaller iron to have been used.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

The Presidential Impeachment—Andrew Johnson Dissected—The Radical Reconstruction Programme—General Grant and the Presidency.

MUSCATINE, Iowa, April 5.—Dear Standard:

It is of course needless for me to tell you of my interest in your labors; yet I do not know that I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of here that the Fortieth Congress dares not impeach the President. The patronage of the Executive power has been Kentucky, and the two parties should fraternize; they yielding nine-tenths and he yielding nothing except gracious phrases. Still, I think we may have great trust in the stolid obstinacy of Johnson. That is a reliance which I have anything else to tell you. Thus far, I have taken from the centre of public affairs, I hardly dare to risk any conjecture before your readers. It seems to us of